

What really matters in working with people?

Adaptive Leadership Workshop

A day for you who are working with the human dimension of change processes.

Thursday, November 20th, 2014
Guelph, Ontario, Canada

What?

Looking for new perspectives on leadership and change? Wondering what really matters in working with people and how to facilitate it? Do you want to talk to others who work with similar challenges as you?

Welcome to an inspiring workshop from the people that brought Open Space Technology training to Guelph.

During the day we will:

- introduce the concept of Adaptive Leadership
- explore and learn more about the social dimensions of creating change
- emphasize the patient and challenging act of leading into the unknown
- explore a model of understanding different phases of change processes and the emerging demands on leadership in each one
- take time to work with your personal leadership challenges

Theory will be mixed with time for reflection, individual and group.

For Whom?

This workshop is for formal and informal community leaders, strategic planners, project managers, business and organization leaders, entrepreneurs and neighbourhood organizations, public engagement specialists, consultants - anyone who has some experience with leading processes and group facilitation.

Where? 10 Carden Street

By Whom? Anna-Eva Lohe from Next Stop You, Sweden.

Cost: $250; sliding scale available - contact us.
